

BAD WEATHER HAMPERS OIL SPILL EFFORTS

POTENTIAL CATASTROPHE AS 200,000 GALLONS OF CRUDE SPEWS INTO THE SEA EACH DAY.

May 2, 2010. High winds and rough seas have hampered efforts to prevent a giant oil slick from reaching US shores and wreaking enormous environmental and economic damage on the fragile Louisiana coast.

The Gulf of Mexico is a prime spawning ground for fish, shrimp and crabs, and a home to oyster beds and a major stop for migratory birds.

Louisiana governor Bobby Jindal warned that the millions of gallons of crude being driven into shore by inopportune south-easterly winds formed a potential catastrophe. "This oil spill threatens not only our wetlands and our fisheries, but also our way of life," he said.

Environmentalists said it could take decades for the maze of marshes - more than 40% of America's ecologically fragile wetlands - to recover if waves simply wash the oil over miles of boom set up to protect the coast. "The surface area is huge," said Mark Floegel, a researcher with Greenpeace. "There probably isn't enough boom in the world to protect what needs to be protected."

Engineers are racing against time to shut off the flow of oil from a ruptured well some 50 miles (80 kilometres) off the coast but are getting nowhere fast as more than 200,000 gallons (around 750,000 litres) of crude spews into the sea each day.

"The surface area is huge," said Mark Floegel, a researcher with Greenpeace. "There probably isn't enough boom in the world to protect what needs to be protected."

Miami University researcher Hans Gruber said satellite images of the slick showed it was three times bigger than estimated, covering an area of 3,500 square miles (9,000 square kilometres).

At the current estimated rate of leakage, it would take less than eight weeks for the spill to surpass the 11 million gallons of oil that poured from the grounded Exxon Valdez tanker in Alaska in 1989.

There has also been political fallout as the White House put new domestic offshore oil drilling on hold until the disaster has been fully investigated.

ANOTHER WARNING TO THE UNITED STATES!

Since the administration of Barack Obama has become hostile to Israel, and demanding the division of God's land and His chosen city of Jerusalem, many prophecy exponents have been expecting the US to suffer another major catastrophe.

In August 2005, the very month that President George Bush pressed Israel to withdraw from Gaza, the massive Hurricane Katrina formed in the Gulf of Mexico and then struck four southern states of the US, flooding and virtually wiping out the city of New Orleans. And three weeks later, and another massive hurricane by the name of Rita, hit the same area, bringing more destruction. That twin disaster was one of the most deadly and costly disasters in US history.

Whenever the US admin takes a stand against God's covenant with Abraham and the people of Israel, a disaster of some kind hits the nation.

Well, what did God say to Abraham?

“And I will make you into a great nation, and I will bless you,
And make your name great; and you will be a blessing.
And I will bless those who bless you, and I will curse him who curses you.
And in you all the families of the earth shall be blessed.” (Genesis 12:2-3)

We see the United States now paying a very heavy price for its treatment of Israel and for the sin that has engulfed the nation. As Obama tries to enforce the division of Jerusalem and the destruction of Israel, God's wrath will become even more severe upon the USA, through floods, environmental destruction, drought and storms.

The Gulf of Mexico oil-spill will prove to be the worst natural disaster in the history of the USA - costing many billions of dollars and causing ecological damage which may take decades to overcome.

The volcano in Iceland that brought England and most of Europe to its knees could be the result of their declaration that the Temple Mount and the Western Wall are not a part of Israel. That volcano however, is nothing compared to what is to come according to the frightening warning from God's Word - Great Tribulation.

“For then there will be great tribulation, such as has never occurred since the beginning of the world until now; and there will be nothing like it again.”

(Matthew 24:21)
